*While we try to teach our children about life, our children teach us what life is all about.

Angela Schwindt

When children use incorrect grammar at this age, rather than correct them help them by responding with correct grammar as you have a conversation. If your child says, "I color orange frog", you can respond with "Yes, I see you have colored the frog orange."

Make storytime meaningful. Saying "I wonder what the monkey will do next!" is more engaging than asking, "Where do monkeys live?"

Language acquisition can be a wonderful process for all parents to witness.

Especially when we acknowledge that we can take part in helping children learn and acquire the language skills they will need to communicate clearly.
